4 KAROLO YA BONE: TLHANOLO

Tlhophha temana (a) kgotsa (b) o bo o e ranola.

(a) Temana ya Seesemane: ranolela mo puong ya Setswana.

I used to think that famous people who donate used their fame only to raise awareness. Such people give a lot of money but they rarely go back to see how their money is used. Tobane Jabu, who has been secretly giving to good causes throughout his life, is an exception. His first donation was a schoolyard for a school in a poor neighbourhood. His financial support also led to the building of new libraries and research laboratories in many Sotho universities. “I love to go to a college and see young people learning. I know that I have helped them to dream better dreams,” he says after visiting the University of Sotholand to which he has given generously. As we left the meeting, I was struck by how normal he seemed, despite his great wealth. His parting words to me summed up the man: “If you have a lot of money, think about giving it away while you are alive because that way you will be able to see how your donations can change lives.”
